

Orange police chief confirms probe of possible wrongdoing by cops

By KEVIN DILWORTH

An investigation has been launched into possible criminal activity among police officers in Orange, the city's chief has confirmed.

"There has been an ongoing criminal investigation within the city," said Chief Robert Sorge. "I'm actively and aggressively continuing this investigation."

Sorge added that further comment "would be inappropriate at this time."

John J. Fahy, as assistant U.S. attorney for New Jersey in charge of the special prosecutions division, said, "We can't confirm any current investigation."

"If he (Sorge) is saying he's conducting a criminal investigation, we just hope that it's done fully and properly, so we can clear our department of any and all alleged aspersions cast upon it," said Lt. Charles Cobbert, president of the Kinsmen, a black police officers group in Orange.

"We remember that, in 1974, the Essex County Prosecutor's Office had an investigation (of the department)," Cobbert continued. "At the time, it was rumored throughout the department that they (the prosecutor's office) did not get everyone who may or may not have been corrupt at the time."

John Redden, deputy first assistant prosecutor in Essex County, said he had "no comment" on whether his office was involved in an investigation of the Orange department.

Chief Sorge disclosed the investigation in the wake of public inquiries raised at Tuesday's city council meeting. Some residents questioned whether it was true some police officers were involved in drug trafficking.

Rocco Zarillo, a South Center Street resident and the city's former director of information and complaints, noted how he was "affronted" by reports that some police officers are under investigation for drug trafficking, and neither Sorge nor Mayor Paul Monacelli, the city's police director, attended the meeting.

If there were police officers "using or selling narcotics," Zarillo continued, Sorge had an obligation to arrest those people and refer the matter to the municipal court and prosecutor's office.

"We're talking about drugs here," Zarillo told the council. "The matter should be investigated. We've got too many clean cops in this department" who are being forced "to have a stigma attached to them."

On Oct. 22, 1982, two Orange police detectives, Thomas Fazio, 31, and Daniel O'Connor, 26, were arrested in a Newark apartment during State Police drug raids.

A state grand jury indicted them on charges of failing to investigate and arrest six alleged drug dealers.

O'Connor and Fazio, Orange officials later reported, were supposed to be at a stakeout in Orange looking for a suspected rapist at the time of their drug-related arrests in Newark.

Both men resigned from the force and lost their pensions. In May 1985, Fazio and O'Connor were sentenced to three years' probation and fined $10,000 and $2,000, respectively.

In a separate probe, the Essex County Prosecutor's Office four years ago investigated the disappearance of $4,500 worth of jewelry from the Orange Police Department's evidence room.

The prosecutor's office concluded there was "some negligence" on the part of authorities in Orange. But, it added, no one person could "be pinpointed as a suspect" responsible for either misplacing or taking the gems.

Two Orange police officers, Abdul H. Bilal, 30, and Craig Burns, 29, were charged with aggravated robbery, receiving stolen property and carrying concealed weapons while in Cleveland last August on official business. They face trial in Cuyahoga County (Ohio) Common Pleas Court on Feb. 11.

This is not the first time Bilal has been in trouble. He was fired from his post on Nov. 7, 1983, after being accused—by then Police Chief Pasquale (Pat) Messano and an independent hearing officer—of improper conduct, discipline problems, failing to answer and assist other police officers while on his post and self-admitted "personal problems."

Two months later, then-Mayor Joel Shain reinstated Bilal after agreeing to do so at the urging of the Kinsmen. Bilal and Burns are members of the organization.

Mayor Sharpe James is flanked by two new Newark judges, Myrna Milan and Alison Brown Jones

James names 2 women to bench

Newark Mayor Sharpe James has nominated two new judges for the Newark Municipal Court.

He noted both were women from minority groups, and added if she is confirmed by the city council, Myrna Milan will become the first woman of Hispanic origin to sit on the Newark bench.

Milan is a former municipal prosecutor for Elizabeth. The other nominee, Alison Brown Jones, has served as assistant corporation counsel for Newark since 1982.

During his State of the City address on Jan. 14, James disclosed he would submit the two nominations. He said the two would make the city's court "an All-American court."

Upon confirmation of the two appointments, he said, "the Newark court will be the most dedicated and most representative judicial body in the state. Our magistrates will reflect our city's diverse population, black, white, Hispanic and Portuguese."

Milan is a former research assistant to Professor Alfred Slocum, who is currently the New Jersey Public Advocate. She is now in private practice in Elizabeth.

Concerning Jones, the mayor said: "During her tenure with the city of Newark, Ms. Jones has served as chief of the law department's labor section, counsel to various agencies and departments and has ably represented the city in numerous workers' compensation cases and civil litigation."

The mayor also revealed he will "forward the names of several sitting judges to the city council for reappointment in the next few weeks."

Since taking office in 1986, James has appointed Paul Daniele and Richard Gomes—the first Portuguese-American on the Newark bench—to the judiciary.

The Newark Municipal Court has five judges and one presiding judge.

We're not an eyeglass factory.

We're the Eye DR_x, and that's what makes the difference.

We think factories are fine. For lots of things. But when it comes to eyeglasses, you deserve personal service. Like the kind you get at the Eye DR_x.

Instead of giving you a number and rushing you through, we give you the time you need. The time to answer your questions. And the time to make sure that everything is just right. That your glasses fit. That your glasses are accurate. That your glasses make you look pretty terrific. Before you realize what's happening, you're being treated like a person instead of a number. And that's the way it should be.

And you make no sacrifice for this personal attention. At the Eye DR_x, you always get efficient service, quality care, affordable prices. Day in. Day out. And that's what makes the difference.

For more information or an appointment, CALL TOLL FREE 800-772-2238 Sunday 9 A.M. to 3 P.M. and Weekdays 9 A.M. to 8 P.M.

SEE THE DIFFERENCE.
SEE THE

C.M. CUMMINS, O.D., EL. SHACK, O.D., P.A.

FOR EXAMS, CONTACT LENSES AND GLASSES.

WE ACCEPT MEDICARE
AND ARE PRIMARY PROVIDERS IN MANY
VISION CARE PROGRAMS.

The Eye DR_x offices are conveniently located in • BLOOMFIELD 1255 Broad St. • BRICKTOWN Dorado Plaza, Lanes Mill Rd. • CLIFTON 1249 Main St. • EATONTOWN/OCEAN TOWNSHIP Orchard Plaza, Rte. 35 South • EDISON 550 Old Post Rd. • MORRISTOWN Shop Rite Plaza, 30 Lafayette Ave. • PARAMUS Super Gap Ctr., Rte. 17 South • TOTOWA/WAYNE 255 Rte. 46 West • TRENTON/EDWING 1330 Parkway Ave. • UNION 934 Stuyvesant Ave. • W. ORANGE/ORANGE 556 Main St. • WOODBRIDGE/AVENEL Plaza 35, 1030 St. Georges Ave.

Village trustee suing S. Orange police chief

By KEVIN DILWORTH

South Orange Police Chief Frederick Gayder, the subject of a scathing report last year that said the department was filled with poor management, favoritism and "a complete lack of professionalism," has been slapped with a defamation of character lawsuit.

Village Trustee Ronald A. Chel, through attorney Neil G. Duffy of West Orange, filed the civil action in Superior Court in Newark last week.

Last July, the suit contends, Gayder "maliciously and willfully" defamed Chel's character when he accused the trustee of "misconduct and malfeasance in public office."

Gayder did this, the suit contends, when he wrote, published and mailed a letter about Chel "to all residents" of South Orange.

The letter came two years after two police officers stopped someone for drunk driving and simultaneously decided not to issue a summons.

In the letter, Gayder accused Chel of using "the color of his office as an elected official" to coax "the two uniformed officers to turn over to him the prisoner" and to drive the person home in his car.

Gayder's letter said, "This arrest and release of a prisoner was covered up, and only later did it surface. The act was considered as official misconduct and of obstruction of justice by the interference of a politician of an ongoing street arrest by police officers."

Duffy noted Gayder referred the matter to the Essex County Prosecutor's Office, which later said it could not find any evidence to support Gayder's claims about Chel.

During testimony before the municipal investigation committee, the two officers—Donald Hanna and Albert J. Miller—said they once stopped an unidentified man for driving "erratically" along Valley Street. But, they testified, they merely wanted to get the motorist off the road and Chel, who was in the area, volunteered to drive the motorist home.

The two officers, the municipal investigation report concluded, agreed to let Chel drive the unidentified man home and there was nothing more to the incident.

The police chief on Friday confirmed he had been served with the civil suit. He referred comment to his attorney, Robert DeGroot, who could not be reached for comment.

As a result of Gayder's actions, the suit maintains, Chel has been exposed "to hatred, contempt, ridicule, disgrace and the loss of good will in his community."

Union to boost staff at packed juvenile jail

By ROBERT E. MISSECK

Union County authorities said yesterday they will increase staff on all shifts in an effort to cope with severe crowding at the juvenile detention center in Elizabeth.

The county is also pressing state officials to transfer as many youngsters as possible, and as quickly as feasible, from the George W. Herlich Juvenile Quarters to state facilities.

Freeholder Chairman Michael Lapolla said the county also plans to begin using a "wristlet" program, similar to the one now in use at the nearby county jail, which will allow youngsters to be sent home, yet remain under supervision electronically.

In the program, youngsters allowed by the court to go home would wear an electronic wristlet. Each wristlet would be hooked up to the youngster's home telephone and would allow authorities constantly to monitor the youngster's whereabouts.

Meanwhile, Lapolla said, the state Division of Youth and Family Services is also working with the Family Court judges, the county prosecutor's office and the probation department to "try to develop other alternatives to institutionalization."

The population at the county detention center, which has a maximum capacity of 35, burgeoned to more than 70 this week, prompting county authorities to take measures to ease the crowding.

Lapolla said the crowding at the facility, which is a short-term detention program for youths who have been sentenced or who are awaiting court action on pending juvenile charges, "is a statewide problem, not one that exists only in Union County."

PUBLIC LIQUIDATION SALE
SAVE 50% - 70%

Persian & Oriental Rugs
Persian, Chinese, Pakistani & Indian

Chapter XI case #86B12240, Southern District Court of NY plus various other conveyance claims

Madison Auctioneers has been commissioned to immediately liquidate all oriental rugs from the above-captioned claims regardless of cost.

No Bidding Wars or Competition
Sat. Jan. 23, 10 - 5 PM
Sun. Jan. 24, 10 - 6 PM
HOLIDAY INN, 304 Rt. 22 West, Springfield - 376-9400

Note: We will gladly appraise your oriental rug for possible trade-in value.
Terms: Cash, check, AmEx, Visa, MC
Authenticity Certificate Supplied with each purchase
Appointed administrators: Madison Auctioneers & Co., Inc.
(201)722-7318 or (201)492-2109